

Mark on the Library Being More Like Google

M: I don't know, I guess it would be nice if the database in the library was a little bit more like...I don't know...I guess a little bit like Google? [both laugh].

M: I don't know...I mean, it would be nice if you could punch in a term into the library database and say, "I want to look for this," and it would scan all of the abstracts of all of the books to find that term anywhere...

J: Right...

M: ...something like that, where, even if it is something that's completely unrelated to what you want to know, they'll still put it there, just because...I think that way it would help with finding information...like, finding a book, for example, that you wouldn't normally find, because it's not directly related, but it has related information.