

This is supplementary material for Stephen J. Quigley, Abigail Zimmerman, Raquel Buege, Destin Natele Cappello-Perez, and Ashanti Duncan's webtext, "Exploring Sustainable Design," published in Kairos: A Journal of Rhetoric, Technology, and Pedagogy, 30(1), available at <http://kairos.technorhetoric.net/30.1/praxis/quigley-et-al>.

Transcript of Interview by Dawn

Dawn: What did you see?

Interviewee: I saw a lot of like plants and lots of rain gardens.

Dawn: What did you learn?

Interviewee: I learned that like one thing that can be meant to like help one specific thing can help like a lot of other things.

Dawn: What surprised you?

Interviewee: I was surprised that there was a thrift store.

Dawn: What was your favorite project?

Interviewee: I liked...I honestly liked the bikes. I liked how like the different ways and like...all the different bike trails and bike road thing-a-ma-bobs yeah.

Dawn: Why is sustainable design important?

Interviewee: To help the environment and not waste things.

Dawn: What are efficient ideas and projects?

Interviewee: The rain Gardens and the thrift store.

Dawn: What is the project that stood out the most?

Interviewee: Uh the thrift store.